NUTR308[2]	Food and Culture Study Experience	INT	Pre: Nil

Unit Information:

Demonstrating cultural competence, engaging with diverse communities and developing an expansive food literacy is important for students who want to make a difference in their personal and professional lives. This unit will provide students with real-world opportunities to facilitate effective communication skills appropriate to a new cultural and linguistic environment, participation in a food-related community project in a new and potentially challenging environment, comparison of food cultures and systems, proficiency in food related knowledge and skills associated with culture. In addition, students will be expected to develop a reference framework for acquiring competence related to a new culture that can be applied in the future to further study, interactions in the community or in employment. The aim of this unit is to help students equip themselves with the skills to succeed in a new cultural environment, to converse through food and cuisine and to respect and value diversity.

Further information concerning this course is provided in the 2027 Handbook.
